[The lettering hereon is quite indecipherable, apart from a few deep marks.]

(NB. This stone has not been found to photograph.)

? [34]

[A small stone, possibly a foot-stone, but no lettering is legible.]

? [62]

A very flaked stone:

---who died -----the---[Mar]ch--- 1818

(NB. The stone is flaking and parts of the inscription are lost.

According to the Burial Records three people, all from Pillaton, died in March 1818 so could perhaps be connected with one or more of the following:

- 1) Mary Smith, March 9th aged 80.
- 2) Mary Stranger, March 25th aged 72.
- 3) John Smith, March 31st aged 78 (could this memorial be the missing 221)?)

All that pass by and on this look
Here you may see how death me took
I, in the morn was fresh and gay,
At noon cut down, wither'd like hay.
Oh! ye my friends mind God and death
Whilst in your health and here on Earth
Such was my lot for to Resign
It may be yours, as well as mine.

Whoe'er thou art, who treads this lonely way
Here for a moment let thy footsteps stay.
O! Let the tear of soft compassion drop
For her, who lies beneath this awful spot;
Virtue and modest worth adorn'd her mind
Tho' to the humble vale of life confin'd

Till, unrelenting death, with fatal dart
Shot thro' each vein, and pierced her tender heart.
But tho' no sculptur'd monumental Bust
Is raised, to ornament her mould'ring Dust
A sure reward awaits beyond the skies
In heavenly bliss, where virtue never dies.
